INTRODUCTION

The Manuscript. The MS. now known as Cotton Nero A. x. came to Sir Robert Cotton from the library of Henry Savile of Bank, in Yorkshire (1568–1617), a great collector who secured rich spoils from the Northern monasteries and abbeys. In Brit. Mus. MS. Harl. 1879, a catalogue of Savile's library, there is a reference to 'an owld booke in English verse beginning Perle pleasants to princes pay in 4° limned'.

The MS., a small quarto volume, was bound up by Cotton between two other MSS. in no way connected with the poems, the first being a panegyrical oration in Latin by Justus de Justis on John Chedworth, Archdeacon of Lincoln, dated July 16, 1468, at Verona, and the second being theological excerpts in Latin in a handwriting of the end of the thirteenth century. At the end is added 'Epitaphium de Ranulpho, abbate Ramesiensi', Abbot from 1231 to 1253.

Richard James, Cotton's librarian, prefixed a list of contents, and described the present poems comprehensively as follows: 'Vetus poema Anglicanum, in quo sub insomnii figmento multa ad religionem et mores spectantia explicantur.' It is obvious that he had merely glanced at the first of the four poems, and it is questionable whether the four poems were differentiated until Sir Frederic Madden, Keeper of the MSS. in the British Museum, gave a fairly accurate account of the illustrations in his Syr Gawayne, published by the Bannatyne Club in 1839, although his description of Pearl is singularly erroneous, and it has been possible to correct some important particulars.

Our poems are contained in that part of the MS. which was until recently numbered from F. 37 to F. 126. Ff. 37 and 38 give four pictures illustrating Pearl, and the text of the poem starts on F. 39 a. There are catchwords at the foot of Ff. 50 b, ¹ See Preface to Patience, edited by I. Gollancz, Select Early English Poems, Oxford University Press, 1913.

62 b, 74 b, 86 b, 98 b, 110 b, and 122 b. The last poem ends on F. 124 b, and at the end, in a somewhat later hand, is written, 'Hony soyt qui mal pence.' Then follow illustrations to Gawain on Ff. 125, 125 b, and 126. Accordingly, we have seven gatherings of twelve leaves, and an eighth of four leaves, the pictures at the beginning being separate.

The handwriting, which is slowly fading, is generally regarded by experts as belonging to about the end of the fourteenth century. So far it has not been identified with that preserved in any other MS. Apart from its 'small, sharp, irregular character', its marked peculiarity is the use of the symbol $t_3 = z$ or s, derived evidently from an Anglo-French scribal mannerism.\(^1\) There are no titles to the poems. Large letters of blue, flourished with red, and illustrations mark off the poems and their main divisions. It is noteworthy that the scribe, in the case of Pearl and Gawain, indicated by a mark the different stanzas. In Cleanness and Patience he evidently treated the poems as consisting of quatrains, and although the marks are in many cases well nigh obliterated, there are enough still visible to justify the inference that this method of marking was carried through consistently.

The MS. is in one hand, but a corrector has here and there tampered with the original, and another hand seems to have gone over some passages which evidently had already become almost illegible. These corrections and tracings are duly recorded in the textual notes that follow.

It is difficult to theorize as to the relation of the MS. to the original script of the poet. It may be safely inferred that, after allowing for scribal errors, our MS. is not an exact transcript of the originals. Some years have evidently elapsed, and the scribe clearly belonged to a time and a district in which final -e's sounded by the poet were dropped to the detriment of the metre—inside the line in Pearl, and notably at the end of the line in the purely alliterative verse. Again, though it would seem that Pearl, Cleanness, and Patience may have been derived from one type of MS., it seems likely that Gawain may have been copied from a MS. of a different type. In discussing the question of the authorship of the poems, it is erroneous to make any rigorous deduction from the general phonology of the poems as preserved in our unique MS., though it may be possible therefrom to localize the dialect of this particular scribe. The only sure test for determining the home of the poet is perhaps to be found in the careful analysis of the rhyming words.

The Illustrations. But for the fact that several of the illustrations are in the body of the MS., one might have inferred from the isolated pictures at the beginning and end that the illustrations were of a later date. They are certainly of crude workmanship. On the whole, the drawing of the artist in the illustrations found in the body of the MS. gives the impression of better composition than the illustrations to Pearl.

Preceding the text of Pearl, four illustrations, coloured in green, red, blue, and yellow, depict the main episodes of the poem. In the first we have the poet, clad in a long red gown with full sleeves, turned back with white wristbands, and a blue chaperon or hood of the period of the late fourteenth century resting on the shoulders, with a scalloped-edged streamer round the neck and reaching up into the foliage above. It is difficult to understand why the streamer seems to reach into the tree, instead of hanging down, unless some metaphorical idea is indicated, perhaps that the spirit of the dreamer has 'sped forth into space', though there are difficulties in the way of assuming that the artist had this in mind. He is resting beside the beflowered mound described in Stanza 3.

In the second illustration the same figure appears drawn on a larger scale and standing by a river, to illustrate ll. 101-8. In the third he is again represented, this time with wide hanging sleeves and his hands raised, and on the opposite bank, illustrating Il. 193–228, is Pearl, dressed in white, though her garb hardly represents the poet's detailed description. Her dress is buttoned tightly up to the neck, and represents the costume of the time of Richard II and Henry IV. The fourth picture is a crude representation showing the dreamer catching a glimpse of the heavenly citadel, with Pearl on the battlements, her arms extended towards him, a tower on the left, a mansion of the heavenly Jerusalem on the right.

Two illustrations follow the text of Pearl. On F. 56a we have an unusual portrayal of Noah's Ark, where instead of the eight saved therein, only seven figures are discernible, namely, Noah and his wife, their three sons, and two wives. The place for the eighth is perhaps indicated in the blank space at the right hand side. The clinking of the vessel is plainly shown. The whole design of the Ark and the means of propelling it are quite contrary to the poet's description. On the reverse, Daniel is depicted expounding the writing on the wall to the sacrilegious Belshazzar and his queen.

On F. 82 a, in a half-page picture under the concluding lines of Cleanness, Jonah is being thrown from the ship into the open mouth of the whale, the ship being of similar design to that illustrating Noah's Ark. On the reverse we have a full-page picture of Jonah preaching to representative Ninevites; it has special reference to the concluding lines of the poem,—men, women, and 'sots'. The illustrator has, I think, indicated the born idiot in the quaint figure holding a stick with both hands, not knowing the right hand from the left. The idiotic expression on his face is noteworthy; there is a characteristic fool's jagged collar round his neck. The city of Nineveh is indicated by battlements and buildings of the same design as the mansion in the fourth illustration to Pearl.

On F. 90 b, preceding Gawain, an illustration of the incident with the Green Knight shows us King Arthur and Guinevere at the trestled high table; on the left we seem to have Gawain after he has obtained the boon from the king, and the subsequent holding out of the severed head by the Green Knight on horseback is shown in the lower part of the picture. The queen, affrighted, is evidently clinging to King Arthur. The knife in his hand perhaps indicates that he may now begin his meal, as his hope of a Christmas marvel has been well satisfied. The figure on the right may be Agravayn a la dure main. Perhaps his name is indicated by the seimitar-like weapon in his hand. The ornamental rounded objects on the table may be meant for the great salt-cellars of the period.

On F. 125 an illustration represents one of the secret visits of the wife of the Green Knight to the sleeping Sir Gawain. The head-dress seems to be suggested by the description of the third interview (ll. 1738-9), but the general attire is not otherwise in accordance with the poet's description. Above are the following lines, in a hand different from that of the MS.:

Mi minde is mukul on on pat wil me nost amende Sum time was trewe as ston & fro schame coupe hir defende.

The handwriting seems to be the artist's; the lines themselves have all the characteristics of the poet.¹

On F. 125 b Gawain is shown approaching the Green Chapel, the Green Knight above with his huge axe.²

Lastly, on F. 126, we have Gawain, fully equipped in armour, kneeling in the presence of King Arthur and the queen, after his return to the court. The court—perhaps the Brotherhood of the Round Table—is represented by a knight dressed in the same garb as Gawain in the lower part of the first of the four pictures. The pointed helmet worn by Gawain in these last two pictures is noteworthy. The illustrator, it would seem, has followed his original only in one respect, namely, in making the helmet high on the knight's head, in accordance with the description in 1. 607.

² It should be pointed out that this illustration is on the reverse of the previous one, and not on a separate page as in the present reproduction.

(iv) t written for c, especially when either spelling gives a word:—

in oscente, I. 672; fate, I. 675; tryed, I. 702; plate, II. 72, IV. 398; fyrte, I. 54; touth, I. 714; 3edethyas, II. 1169.

(v) c once written for t (possibly scribe copied from a MS. in which c was made like a t):—

much, III. 54.

(vi) 1 written for h, or second stroke of h omitted:—
 lere leke, I. 210; lere, I. 616; clapel, IV. 705; claplayne3, IV. 930; schulde, IV. 1286.

(vii) h written for 1:—sawhe, I. 461.

(viii) l written for k (or for scribal method of writing first k in kk):—dolked, I. 11; lyþe3, I. 369; tulket, II. 1414.

(ix)? bl written for w:—blose, I. 911.

16. Letters transposed, especially l and r:—

20. Wrong abbreviation used:—pertermynable, I, 596.

21. One minim too many:

meşbor, I. 688; īme, II. 312; mon, III. 348; emdeleş, IV. 629.

22. One minim too few:-

hen, I. 532; baune, II. 620; tyne, III. 59; hyn, IV. 865. 23. Forms of different phonetic development substituted in spite of rhyme, metre, or alliteration:—

spennd (for spenned), I. 49; adubmente (for adubbemente), I. 72; yzen (for ene), I. 200; pyse, spyce (r. w. Grece), I. 229, 235; cortoyse (for cortayse), I. 303; poule (for paule), I. 457; cortayse (for cortaysye), I. 469, 480, 481; meyny (for meny), I. 542; reprene (for repreny), I. 544; sez (for syz), I. 698; kyst (alliterating on ch), II. 464; scape (alliterating on sch), II. 600; gawan (alliterating on w), IV. 343; scade (alliterating on sch), IV. 425: myzt (for mozt), IV. 872.

In dealing with this classification of scribal errors, one might differentiate actual mistakes from orthographical substitutions on the part of the scribe (or scribes) for the poet's own forms of words, which can perhaps be best studied with reference to the rhyming words. But even here it would be hazardous to presume on the poet's orthography. Did he, for example, write 'wace' to emphasize the eye-rhyme with 'grace', as seems likely, but cannot be proved? I am elsewhere dealing with this very question of the rhymes in Pearl and Gawain.

It is with no little satisfaction that at length I have been able to carry out a long-cherished wish to give to the world a reproduction of this precious manuscript, which has preserved the work of a great poet of the spacious days of Edward III. It is a special satisfaction to be able to associate the volume—the first text issued by the Society-with the beloved memory of our Founder, Dr. Furnivall. Soon after his death, at a meeting presided over by that other honoured leader, Professor Skeat, it was decided that a series of facsimiles might be issued as the most appropriate tribute to his memory. Professor W. P. Ker made a generous contribution towards the purpose. Major John Munro, late Assistant Director of the Society, in token of his devotion to Dr. Furnivall, also helped forward the proposal, with special reference to Cotton Nero A.x. Various circumstances delayed the carrying out of the project, and it has been decided in view of present conditions to include this facsimile, excellently reproduced by Mr. Hallett Hyatt, among the ordinary publications of the Society.

The name of the poet still remains unattested, but his work reveals a personality standing pre-eminent as the author of perhaps the most tender elegiac poem of the Middle Ages, and certainly of the noblest of all the romances of chivalry. As one handles this reproduction of the fast-fading manuscript, it is well to bear in mind, when noting scribal errors and the like, that but for this humble scribe we should have lost irretrievably Perle and Sir Gawayne.

Dui scripsit sit benedictus.
Amen.
